

INDIANA UNIVERSITY

THE UNIVERSITY GRADUATE SCHOOL

Travel Award to Institute on Teaching and Mentoring

Doctoral Scholars Program (DSP) and Dissertation Year Award

Department Nominations Due: TBD

More than one-third of America's college students are people of color. However, the percentages of college and university faculty who are members of racial/ethnic minority groups are only small fractions of the total. Nationwide, approximately five percent of faculty are African-American, roughly three percent are Hispanic and about one percent are Native American. Indiana University and the Southern Regional Education Board Doctoral Scholars Program are working to change this.

The goal of the Travel Award to Institute on Teaching and Mentoring is to prepare more minority Ph.D. students who seek careers as college faculty. The Travel Award provides multiple layers of support including career counseling, job postings, counseling and advocacy, a scholar directory for networking and recruiting, invitation to attend the Institute on Teaching and Mentoring and early career support for pre-candidacy doctoral students. Ph.D. students who: apply to, are selected for, and accept the Doctoral Scholars Program (DSP) Award will receive an invitation to attend the institute up to three years, whereas Ph.D. students who: apply to, are selected for, and accept the Dissertation Year Award will be invited to attend the Institute on Teaching and Mentoring for one year.
